TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 3.

Says Moore-It is a most happy combination when the wife of a man of genius unites intellect enough to appreciate the talents of her husband with quick feminine sensibility, which can passionately feel his success. Pluy tells us that his Calpuroia, whenever her husband pleaded an important cause, had messengers ready to report to her every murmur of applause he received, and the poet Statius in alluding to his own victories at the Olympian games, mentions the breathless kisses with which his wife Claudia used to cover the triumphal garlands he brought home. Mrs. Sheridan may well take her place by the side Sheridan may well take her place by the side of these Roman wives. Moore also remarks conveyancing to be borne by purchaser.
D. L. SMOOT, that Mrs. Sheridan had another attractionthat of singleg her own verses, in her own music, on the harp, to her husband, when he came to his home, with no instruction, as Pliny said, but love, who is, after all, the best mas-

THE ICE CROP. - The absorbing topic along the Hudson at the present time is the ice crop. Three days ago icemen generally took a very dismal view of the situation, but since then matters have changed greatly, and the prospects to-day for a good ice harvest are much better than they were. In fact the harvesting of the crop his already begun, not exactly all along the line, but in the upper Hudson at Schodack, Stuyvesant, Coxsackie, and Stockport. Men are at work at all those places flooding the ice. At Barrytown a gang of men are working in the cove for the Consumers' Company. They are getting out ice ten inches thick, and drag if by wagons nearly half a mile to the large house of the company.
